

DAILY BRITISH COLUMBIAN.

NO. 8.

VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA, WEDNESDAY MORNING, MARCH 24, 1869.

[VOL. 9.]

This Journal is the oldest newspaper published in British Columbia; it is read by every business man from Victoria to the Rocky Mountains, and is unrivalled as an advertising medium for the Colony.

This paper may be read gratuitously in London at the Central Establishment of "HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND CATHARTIC," 53, Oxford Street, W.C., where advertisements and subscriptions for the same are received.

IMMATERIAL PARLIAMENT.

(From the London Standard.)

The recently rejected members of the new parliament assembled to-day at the Westminster Palace (Hotel). A crowd of spectators welcomed the successive arrivals, and many hon. gentlemen were loudly cheered.

Precisely at four o'clock the Speaker's chair was taken by Mr. Beale, who said he had assumed that position because he considered that he was the person most worthy to occupy it (oh). Mr. Beale ought to be considered in the selection of those who guided the deliberations of popular assemblies. Others might differ from him in the estimate he had formed of his qualifications (hear), but he should be unworthy of his position in the country if he shrank from acting on his own convictions.

Sir G. Bowyer protested against the usurpation of the chair by any gentleman until he had been elected in the proper constitutional manner (cheers). Even his Holiness the Pope did not assume the throne until elected by the College of Cardinals (hear).

The Marquis of Harrington concurred with the last speaker. He would appeal to the law officers of the Crown (hear), whom he was happy to see opposite (cheers), whether in their opinion the Speaker should not be a person duly chosen by a majority of the assembly.

The Attorney General confessed that his belief in election by majorities had been recently much shaken (hear), but, whilst he was far from admitting that form of election to be uniformly productive of satisfactory results (cheers), he was still of opinion, and he believed he might also speak for his learned friend, it was a time-honoured custom to which they were bound to submit.

The Solicitor General agreed with his learned friend (the Attorney General), and was not prepared to advise a disregard of the constitutional form of election, although under that system he had himself witnessed with regret a silly opponent succeed in supplanting one who in his [the Solicitor General's] opinion was not unfit to fill the highest office in the land (hear).

Mr. Bradlaugh was an utter unbeliever (hear) in the expediency of following the rules and customs of that effete and useless body which styled itself the Imperial parliament. Worth was altogether disregarded as a qualification for that assembly (cheers). When they saw men like themselves rejected from that body, were they going to adulate it by that imitation which was said to be the sincerest flattery? He declined to believe that (cheers).

Mr. Mill said he was glad to see hon. gentlemen on both sides were beginning to appreciate his principles of the representations of minorities. The minorities had been faithful to them all. He himself was in a minority. But for that he should not have been there. The folly of majorities had never been more conspicuously illustrated, if he excepted the rejection of his friend Mr. Chadwick. He would therefore propose, that whilst the usual form of election was adhered to, the minority, whether ayes or noes, should have it.

Mr. Bernal Osborne wondered if they ever heard of a doukey race. It was one of those ancient games in which, as some one had well said, "the race was not to the swift." The last won, and if both stood still together it was a dead heat. That seemed to be their little game now. It was, he believed, an Irishman—not Sir Boyle Roche—who discovered there were three kinds of motion—a forward motion, a backward motion, and a standstill motion. The last seemed to be the kind of progress for which the hon. gentleman seemed to think himself best fitted. He had always before understood him to be in favour of a somewhat quick advance, but he remembered a mill was useless unless it could turn round. He thought in the position in which they found themselves it was quite unimportant who occupied the chair. One man was as good as another, and perhaps better. Those gentlemen who coveted the distinction could take it turn and turn about.

Mr. Beales must decline that proposition. He was ready to leave the Chair when he saw any one he thought more fitted to fill it; but he must assert the principle that merit alone was to be the criterion of elevation.

Mr. Huddleston said the principle just alluded to was one of a most revolutionary character (hear). It had never been adopted by any government with which he had been acquainted (oh). He ought to be a judge (laughter), for he had sat in the last parliament, and given particular attention to all legal appointments (cheers). He found merit had not been recognized.

Mr. Darby Griffith did not wonder that governments disregarded merit, but he must express his disgust that the people should do so. Although his voice had been seldom heard (laughter) in the last Parliament, he had been always a working member, yet his services seemed to be entirely forgotten.

Mr. Roebuck seldom agreed with anybody (hear), but he saw some truth in the last speaker's remarks. The ingratitude of the people was shameful (cheers), and if a man saw fit not to fall in with some prescribed course of action he was followed by a system of political ratcheting (cheers) until his destruction was achieved (cheers). Neither the service of the past, the repentance of the present, or the promises of the future would avail (hear). He scorned a people composed of broad heads and narrow hearts.

Mr. Schreiber congratulated the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roebuck) on the valor with which he had fought his battle. Henceforth "In prelio Certe!"

He would have a different signification (cheers). He might remind him that the right hon. gentleman near him (Mr. Horsman) was in the same predicament.

"Post Equitem sedet atra cura."

Mr. Horsman said unfortunately the cause of his care was ahead of him. However he would put a merry face on it (cheers). He begged to assure his hon. friend that he intended to be in another place before long. The head of the Scotch terrier had entered without difficulty, and the tail would not be long behind (cheers). Although mistaken in his particular case, he thought the people had shown in the recent rejection much more sense than he had given them credit for (oh). Hon. gentlemen might cry "oh!" but if he had derided the people when others extolled them, he was not now to be prevented from applauding them because others blamed (cheers). He began rather to like reform, and hoped to see it carried forward into the hereditary chamber (cheers).

Lord C. Hamilton and Lord Dalkeith rose together to protest against the introduction of the electoral system into the House of Lords. A peer obtained his majority once for all at 21 (cheers).

Mr. Ferrand thought it was an instance of the basest ingratitude of all. There was nothing he had not promised the dockyard men, and he had got them a whole holiday to vote for him (hear), yet he was not returned.

Mr. Rearden thought it would be better at once to submit seats to public competition (oh), and knock them down to the highest bidder. He would undertake the business at a moderate commission. He spoke without reserve (cheers).

Baron Rothschild considered the plan suggested had its advantage (cheers). Drawing a check was less unpleasant to him than meeting with one (cheers).

Mr. Freshfield in that case would advise the Bank of England to purchase a borough for their solicitor (hear); but he feared the elections could not be had over again.

Mr. Milner Gibson trusted that some of the more obviously competent members would have the patriotism to retire (loud cheers) and make room for those who [like himself] were really much needed in the legislature (cheers). The recent arguments of his hon. friend [Mr. Mill] should not be forgotten (hear).

Mr. Chadwick, without wishing to intrude, was willing to give the nation the benefit of his services if any member chose to resign in his favour (cheers).

Dr. Russell would see that this kind offer was noticed in the public prints.

Mr. Henry James inquired if there was any question before the house.

Mr. Beales said there was not. He had desired to show his impartiality by allowing anybody to say any thing he liked; and as it was now his—the speaker's—usual dinner hour, he should adjourn for refreshment.

Mr. Handel Coatham confessed he had quite enough of it, and therefore did not rise to oppose an adjournment, but simply to protest against their assembling in a public house. Was there no temperance hall to be had? It was useless to suppose that their deliberations could serve any good end if conducted in an atmosphere vitiated by the neighborhood of alcoholic poisons.

Mr. Bernal Osborne couldn't stand that. He had heard something of that before. He thought it was at Nottingham. He had then licked his hon. friend. He Mr. Osborne had been licked this time, but it was by a lady—God bless her. That was no reason why he shouldn't liquor. He supported to motion to adjourn.

The motion was accordingly carried without a division, and the house adjourned at six o'clock.

THE LADIES' VELOCIPED. — The Victoria Velocipede that is to be raffled, can be seen at the Alhambra Hall, where anybody wishing to practice can do so round the ball room.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 1869.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

Not the least mistake of the Government is its persistent refusal to open up a channel through which the trade of our Southern goldfields might be made somewhat more profitable to the Colony than it unfortunately can be under existing circumstances. At present the entire supplies for that, by no means unimportant, section of the Colony pass over the boundary line, in the hands of foreign merchants, and the Colony only derives an infinitesimal advantage in the form of that portion of the duty of customs which remains after defraying the expense of collection. The whole carrying trade is in the hands of people residing south of the forty-ninth parallel of latitude, and whatever profits accrue therefrom flow into their pockets. Not only are they enabled to monopolise the carrying trade, and the lucrative business of supplying the miners, but, in doing that they also secure the advantage of the travel and traffic in raw gold, for these will generally follow the current of trade. Thus one of our most important goldfields can scarcely be said to be a source of wealth to us. Both the prestige and the profits are almost entirely sacrificed, and that, too, at the very time when we can least afford the sacrifice. Hitherto the single goldfield of Cariboo has secured almost undivided attention; and it is now, when Cariboo has been levelling down and Kootenay has been levelling up, that one begins more clearly to realize the mistake. If one may be allowed to judge from present appearances the relative claims of these two goldfields will shortly be more evenly balanced than they have been in the past. We would not be misunderstood here. It is not our intention to suggest the slightest relaxation in the attention paid to Cariboo. It has long been and is yet the great standby, and has at no period received one whit more consideration than it was fairly entitled to. Indeed, at this moment it is not the subject of that earnest solicitude and pains-taking legislation which it ought to be. We believe that by a careful encouragement of associated effort, a large breadth of ground now beyond individual means of development, could be made remunerative, and would employ a great deal of labor. But, while Cariboo ought to be fairly and honestly dealt with, Kootenay should not be left out in the cold. It is not our intention to lay down any arbitrary course of treatment nor to pronounce upon the comparative merits of the different routes, each of which finds its advocates. It is scarcely creditable to the Government that doubt still exists as to which is the best route to that goldfield. Too much revenue has already been squandered in haphazard road and trail making, to permit of the advocacy of a repetition of any such expensive and unsatisfactory experiment. The recollection of the expenditure of some sixty or seventy thousand dollars upon the celebrated Dewdney trail to Kootenay, is still painfully present to our mind, and some allowance should be made for its influence upon the Executive in dealing with this subject. But we do decidedly blame the Government for not having ascertained before now whether by supplementing that outlay, and rendering the trail which has already cost so much passable, or by opening up the Eagle Pass the best means of communication with Kootenay will be afforded. Surely ample time has been allowed for this. Year after year the subject has been urged, both on the floor of the Legislature and through the public Press, and no really practical and well-directed step has yet been taken towards deciding a question of such moment to the Colony. Our own Merchants stand ready to do their part. Only let a practicable route be opened and they are not wanting in those qualities necessary to enable them to step in and secure to the Colony all the advantages of the by no means inconsiderable trade of that region. It is at a time like the present, when trade with our neighbors has been cut off by a restrictive policy, and when domestic trade has dwindled down to a narrow compass, that people are most sensitive upon a question like the present. Another season opens its arms and invites to action. Would the Government but show a disposition to have this question set at rest during the approaching season, by a thorough exploration to be immediately followed by the opening of a road over whichever route might present the greatest advantages, such action would go very far towards inspiring confidence in minds now ready to surrender to despair, and would have some influence in checking the fatal exodus now going on.

QUEER ACCIDENT.—We learn that on the last trip of the Hunt to Victoria, a bullock was tied to the shaft before starting, and forgotten until the steamer was under way. The consequence was the rope wound around the shaft and finally the bullock revolved with the motion of the machinery. No damage was done to the boat, but the gymnastic feat was said to have been rather hard on the bull. —Olympian Standard.

A NAVAL BALL.—We understand the Officers of Her Majesty's Ship Zealous intend giving a ball on board on the 1st of April next. This will probably be the last opportunity our citizens will have for some time to come of enjoying a dance on the deck of that noble ship. We believe a large number of invitations have been issued.

A SCHOOL MASTER WANTED.—The appointment of Mr. Burr to the Chief Constabulary of Yale, leaves the public school in that town without a teacher. Any properly qualified person, ambitious to teach the young idea at the head of navigation how to shoot, would do well to make immediate application.

NATIVE SAILORS.—The Capt. of the Bark Prince of Wales, finding as he was about sailing from this Port, that a plot was laid to extort money from him for a number of seamen which he required, shipped about a half dozen of Dr. Tuzo's best trained Indians, who readily engaged for the voyage on the condition that they were to return by the same ship.

CRICKET.—Another interesting match will be played at Colwood on Thursday, 25th instant, between the Fleet and H. M. S. Zealous; the Fleet having Messrs. Reid and Ralph, and the Zealous having Mr. Brodie as bowlers. Wickets to be pitched at 11 a.m.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.—Two lads, the younger about 7 years of age, appeared before Mr. Pemberton yesterday on a charge of stealing a six-horse coach whip, the property of Mr. Williams. The culprits were remanded for one day for further examination.

MORE COAL.—The Portland Commercial learns that a rich vein of stone coal has been very recently discovered in Clark county, W. T., on the south fork of Lewis river. The coal is a pure article of anthracite.

MORE THEFT.—Six pair of window sashes were stolen from an unoccupied building adjoining the Church reserve, on Monday night last.

FOR NANAIMO.—The sailing of the str. Fly has been postponed until tomorrow morning, at 7 o'clock.—See advertisement.

GREAT BARGAIN'S TO-DAY.—Messrs J. P. Davies & Co have two Auction Sales to-day.—See their advertisement.
